

What is claimed is:

1. A method of selecting a pacing site on the heart comprising:
 1. entering the pericardial space with a pacing lead having an asymmetrical pacing electrode;
 2. manipulating the lead inside the pericardial sack while taking pacing thresholds at multiple location on the heart;
 3. selecting and attaching the lead at one of said locations.